"The culture war at the heart of open source" (Steve Klabnik)

If you ask a random developer what "open source" means to them, you won't often hear "software that follows the Open Source Definition." If you ask them "what's the difference between free software and open source software," you'll often hear "aren't those the same thing?" or "you can charge money for open source software, it's not always free." You may even hear "it's on GitHub."
